How to identify compound adjectives

An adjective is the name of a word that adds information to a noun describing aspects of noun such as quantity, quality or color. Describe words help us convey specific details when you pass information to another individual or group. The individual can be a close friend, relative, colleague or even an unknown person who asks for directions. We use adjectives in all our current forms of communication with others. This includes speaking in person, on the phone, sending text messages to others and publishing or reporting on social media. Adjectives also subscribed to the property of pronouns, such as "Billy's bike". The school is where we first learned about adjectives and how to use or identify them in a sentence. We are taught that they provide information that helps us identify and locate something or someone or imagine what is described. Examples are "red, leather bag" and "small girl". Instead of adjectives, we also use emojis or icons to indicate how we feel and to emphasize or highlight an activity. tudmeak / Getty Images Adjectives provide descriptive information and details during a discussion about something or someone. They use details to describe things like a job, a potential vacation place or features of a new purchase such as a car, a home or a product. We use adjectives to describe positive and negative feelings towards someone we like or do not like. When talking about a person or persons, adjectives allow us to be specific in describing both favorable and unfavorable aspects of an individual or group. shapecharge / Getty Images TV journalists or newspaper journalists usein their most extreme form to describe a scene, situation or event as a revolt, a fire or a celebrity or a royal wedding. At the extreme end of the description, there are limitedavailable that we will hear or read repeatedly every day. Examples of extreme adjectives by the media are: "horrible crime," "comparison images," "traumatic experience" or "transgenic accident." positive or pleasant events can be described as, "heroic reparation, "nice wedding dress" or "sweeping stage." vm / getty imagesduring meetings, discussion groups or tutorials, adjectives are used to discuss the subject or topic that has been addressed. meetings are held in various contexts such as politics, the army, companies or institutions. In this context, adjectives are used to describe proposed or implemented plans and strategies such as military advancement or changes to policies or laws. adjectives describe oats or suggested methods as covered or aggressive. when a result is evaluated, adjectives describe the situation to the group oand adjectives as a success time or disaster. peopleimages / getty imagescolors are adjectives we learned as children to describe something we have seen or have chosen. We talk about "blue or black skis," "red fire engines" or "white shirt," as children, our learning is based on primary colors, and from there we expand our ability to describe using shadow variations such as navy lime or "pastel. "the color oo allows us to transmit information about what we are describing, such as "the light of the yellow sun," "the green grass," "the blue dress" or what we are looking for, like, "the red roses," "the bath shoes" or "the silver car." adjectives are words that we hate in private conversations to describe our personal feelings to those close friends or relatives that we choose to trust. our moods and feelings change, and we object to share our thoughts or feelings about someone or something like aThe adjectives we use can be positive, such as, "wonderful" or negative, such as, "disgusting" or neutral, as, "right". Eva-Katalin / Getty Images Adjectives are used by parentsdiscuss things with children as rules, behaviors and consequences. Parents will sometimes refer to small children like, "good" and "bad", "smart" or "talented". Children have a limited but constantly growing vocabulary to describe things or their feelings to parents or other adults. They will use words from their proper vocabulary for age through their perception of things like size or quantity. Examples are: "gift house" and "millions of lollies". gradyreese / Getty Images When we receive or share social media content, we use adjectives to describe how we feel about something we have received. When you share messages or images we will use adjectives that express our opinions or feelings. The examples are, "mental gesture", "kind person" or " distressing situation". We use adjectives to describe or highlight our feelings or reactions. lovro77 / Getty Images Adjectives are used by us to describe our specific symptoms, such as "chronic pain", or "dangerous urine". This allows doctors to interpret the information we provide next to observations such as temperature. Medical teams will use adjectives that have clinical meanings and are included by trained professionals. Examples are tachycardic heart rate, malignant tumor, comatose, or unresponsive patient. jacoblund / Getty Images how to diagram compound adjectives. how to use compound adjectives. how to identify adjectives. what are compound adjectives examples
